In 1907 (Didn't he die in 1903? -- See first pages) Mr. Francis J. Cooke wrote the following account of the death of Benjamin Rice Brigham:

"He was in feeble health and had been on guard till he was exhausted. Wishing to be in the battle the next day, he came to my camp, and with tears in his eyes threw himself on the ground at our feet and said, 'Boys, I've stood guard two nights, and am detailed for the third. I want to be in the battle tomorrow. Will some one take my place?' I told him I was willing to do so. He threw himself on my blanket and in two minutes was sound asleep.

"He was among the first killed in the battle next day. Thus I gave him his last sleep before his last long one.

"Brigham was my friend and my comrade. We ate together, slept together, fought together. We were two boys about nineteen years of age, fighting for the same cause. I would have done anything for him, and I weep for him today, as I wept for him sixty-five years ago when I looked for him after the battle and found he was no more.

"As the battle raged, he was directly in the rear of the cannon. He was mortally wounded in the beginning of the fight. He threw up his arms and cried out: 'O, Captains! and fell forward on his face.

I loved Brigham better than any man on earth, except Tom Lubbock ....'
